PREFACE.

This second volume of “Researches into Chinese Superstitions”, deals with charms, spells, and what may be generally styled “religious magic”. The “charact” or charm occupies a prominent part in all primitive ethnic religions, and especially in those that worship spirits, and instil into their followers a constant fear of ghosts and spectres. In the earliest times, the Chinese people, so far as we can glean from historical records, believed in Shangti 上帝, the Supreme Ruler, and worshipped beside him, though not on a footing of equality, the genii presiding over mountains and rivers, and the host of spirits that peopled the air (1). These spirits were considered to be some good and others bad. The former were deemed to protect man, and the latter to inflict evil, molest and injure him. The malignant influence of the bad spirits had to be checked and restrained, and the device adopted for this purpose was the charm. The charm is thus the principal means of commanding spirits, expelling, warding off and muzzling demons, ghosts and all kinds of spectres (2).

Antiquity of the charm. — Exorcising magic is, no doubt, very old in China, and probably born not much later than her belief in spectres, which is almost equivalent to saying that it is as old as her people (3). Some writers trace it back to Hwangti 黃帝, the legendary founder of the Chinese Empire, and who it is said lived 2697 years before the christian era. Others attribute it to Lao-tze 老子, the old or venerable philosopher, born B.C. 604, and founder of the system of philosophy and mysticism known as Taoism. Under the Chow 周 dynasty (B.C. 1122-249) it was customary for the “Son of Heaven”, petty rulers and high officials, when visiting their

States, to be preceded by exorcists and sorcerers armed with peach-rods and reeds, in order to protect them from spectral evils (1). Exorcising ceremonies were also performed against pestilence in Spring, and again in early Autumn (2). Evil spirits were then supposed to cause diseases, and the same belief prevails to-day among all classes. In the time of Confucius (B.C. 551-479), we have documentary evidence that the expulsion of demons and exorcising processions took place on a large scale. In the Analects (3), it is stated that when the fellow citizens of the Sage celebrated the great "No" 雘 ceremonies, he put on his court robes and stood on the Eastern steps. During the "Yang" 楊 ceremony, when the villagers were driving away pestilential influences, he likewise stationed himself on the Eastern steps (4). In these processions, verbal spells were chanted and used against spectres with intimidating threats and express commands to go away.

Under the Han 漢 dynasty (B.C. 206—A.D. 221), a thorough system of charms was evolved. These were principally due to Chang Tao-ling 張道陵, the first official head of the Taoist church, and styled by his followers grand "Heavenly master" T'ien-shi 天師. At the age of seven, he is said to have mastered all the writings of Lao-tse 老子, and later on to have received from him a complete knowledge of charms and spells. Having retired to the recesses of the "Dragon and Tiger mountain", Lung-hu-shan 龍虎山, in the province of Kiang-si 江西, he composed there a book on charms, endowed with wonderful efficacy for expelling demons and curing all diseases. His descendants have followed the same profession down to the present day. Popular Taoism is, in fact, a complete system of religious magic for expelling and killing evil spirits, ghosts and spectres, and exercising influence over Heaven and Earth, whose regular order, Tao 道, is destroyed by these maleficent spirits (1).

Buddhists have also their own system of charms or “Yoga” (2), which has its “Dharmā” (3) or formulas for removing “Mara” (4) and ensuring good to mankind. They have borrowed much from Taoists, hence the Reader will frequently find in this Volume a Taoist and Buddhist charm placed beside each other, and producing an identical effect. Buddha’s name is employed on these charms, and he is called the “light of the world” and the universal expeller of demons. They also bear the name of Wei-to 韋陀 (5), or the initial and final syllables of the mystic formula “Om! mani padme hum”, oh! the jewel of creation in the Lotus (6).

Nature of charms. — To understand thoroughly the nature of the charm, it is necessary to set forth briefly the cosmic notions generally entertained by the Chinese. The old orthodox belief held all Nature to be animated. Confucianists, Taoists and Buddhists, all people the world with countless spirits, divided into two classes “Shen 神 and Kwei 鬼”. The “Shen” are the intelligent, etherial part of the universe, spiritual energies, influences and breaths. They are beneficent, the protectors of man, and the authors of happiness. The “Kwei” belong to a low standard of spirits. They are evil-disposed, malignant, ever prone to violate the law and disturb the order of the universe. They generally perform in the world the leading part in the distribution of evil. They visit man with disease,

(2) Incantations accompanied by mysterious movements and distortions of the hands and fingers for magic purposes (Eitel. Sanscrit-Chinese Dictionary, p. 175).

(3) Charms and mystic formulas possessing magic powers. They are mostly couched in unintelligible jargon, the Chinese copies being generally mere transliterations of Sanscrit or Tibetan sounds (Eitel. p. 31).

(4) The personification of Evil. He assumes different forms to tempt and frighten men. In Indian mythology he is often represented with one hundred arms and riding on an elephant (Eitel).

(5) Transcription of Veda, a tutelary god borrowed from India and Tibet, and who watches over all Buddhist temples. Tutelary gods are peculiarly clever at overcoming the noxious influence of demons (Hackmann. Buddhism as a Religion, p. 213).

cause plagues and epidemics, produce poisonous breaths and influences, working at times in connection with the vicissitudes of the seasons. They even snatch away the souls of children and grown up persons, which, however, may be restored through animistic magic.

The “Shen” being good and protectors of man, and the “Kwei” evil and malignant, the Chinaman employs the former as allies and instruments in his struggle with the latter. Charms are the ingenious device adopted. These set to work divine powers, call down the “Shen” to receive sacrifice and bestow felicity, propitiate them, interest them in the welfare and happiness of man; they also command, expel and counteract the evil influences of demons, ghosts and spectres. Hence De Groot (1) describes charms as “mandates, orders, injunctions issued under seal, and painted or written with a cinnabar pencil. They are the principal means of commanding spectres, expelling and killing “Kwei”. They help to catch, fetter, imprison, torture, drown, behead, kill, burn and roast all kinds of spectres and ghosts. By burning written charms, spirits are caught, imprisoned and tortured”. The Chinese world of spirits is largely modelled after man’s own image. They appear in human shape, have human passions, may be pursued, caught, warded off with weapons, and strange to say, may even be killed. When a “Kwei 鬼” dies, it becomes a “Tsih 𩺰”, something so horrible that it terrifies all spectres when they see this character posted over a door in time of pestilence. The charm is therefore a device of religious magic, an instrument for reducing spectres to submission, disarming them, counteracting their evil influence, and preventing them from injuring man in his present and future life.

Power and variety of charms. — The system holds boundless sway over all minds in China, from the man in the street to the Confucian scholar and the ruler on the throne. This explains how they are used on a large scale and sold in vast numbers. Thousands wear them as amulets on their persons, they are posted up over doors, placed under the eaves of houses, attached to bed-curtains, worn in the hair, or put into a red satchel and suspended from the button-hole. They are also burnt, and the ashes mingled with wine, tea or hot water, are administered as a specific against bad influences, diseases and attacks from evil spirits (1).

The Chinese ascribe to them an enormous power. Thus, they call down gods (2) to receive sacrifice and bestow felicity; they promote happiness here and hereafter; they procure a blissful old age. They confer benefits on man, a bountiful harvest, fair weather, sunshine and rain; they end snowfalls, droughts and famine. They protect buildings and houses from evil influences. They expel all kinds of spirits, demons and spectres; they preserve from epidemics and pestilence. They cure almost all diseases which the flesh is heir to, stomach-aches, headaches, dyspepsy, gastritis, diarrhoea, stitches in the side, sore eyes. They dispel sadness and anxiety in sickness. They bring back departed souls, or if impossible, improve at least their condition in the "world of shades". Stellar charms enjoy a reputation for conducing to a happy marriage, and promoting harmony between husband and wife.

All these marvellous effects are briefly set forth and illustrated by the Author in the present volume. How he secured such excellent specimens is indeed a marvel in itself. Some he obtained from pagan friends and acquaintances, from Taoist and Buddhist priests whom he accosted when visiting their temples. Others have been purchased in visiting shops dealing in superstitious objects. Among the collection thus obtained a selection was necessary, and it has been wisely made.

This second volume affords the Reader a novel and added insight into the psychology of the Chinese soul. It shows how the popular mind peoples the world with spirits, demons and spectres. The struggle with this spectral world constitutes chiefly the religion of the masses. The charm has been adopted as a device to rally the gods to the assistance of man, and help him to overcome the powers of evil. Such a worship has fostered among the people a spirit of interest and fear, much more than one of genuine respect and honour, as any one can see for himself when visiting a Chinese city-temple. It has also led to the grossest polytheism, and contributed much to the neglect of Shang-ti 上帝, the vague and faint notion which the primitive Chinese entertained of the Godhead.

CHAPTER VI.

FOREWORD.

Healing charms, lucky charms, petition-charms etc.

Fu-luh 符籙.

We collect into this chapter, under a general heading, written charms, hwa-fu 畫符, petition-charms... and all kinds of magic scripts, devised by Buddhist monks, and especially by Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, for the purpose of curing diseases, preventing or checking epidemics, expelling demons, counteracting evil influences, and obtaining the protection of the Gods in all human ills. As the misfortunes which befall men here below are countless, one may imagine the various devices, which these cunning folks, ever on the look out for gain, constantly invent. The drawing up of charms is one of the chief pursuits of Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士 (1). They have always some ready for every imaginable case, disease and condition, to which poor suffering mortals may be exposed.

(1) Taoism has a complete system of religious magic for expelling and killing "Kwei" 鬼 (evil spirits, ghosts and spectres), and exercising influence over Heaven and Earth, whose regular order "Tao" 道, is destroyed by these maleficent spirits. The making and use of charms and spells are inseparable from Taoist ritualism. Its so-called priests are not only wizards and magicians, but also quack-doctors, who compete strenuously with the profession in China. De Groot. The Religious System of China. Vol. VI. p. 1025 (Spells and Charms).

ARTICLE I.

CHARMS IN GENERAL.

Origin, nature, use and division.

During the reign of the Emperor Shun-ti 順帝, of the Eastern Han dynasty, Tung-Han 東漢 (1), Chang Tao-ling 張道陵 (2), the first official head of the Taoist magical church, and grand "Heavenly Master", T'ien-shi 天師, of the fraternity, composed in the mountain fastness of Lung-hu-shan 龍虎山 (the dragon and tiger mountain), in the province of Kiang-si 江西, a book on charms, endowed with wonderful efficacy for expelling demons, curing all diseases, and deceiving simple-minded folks. Those who invited him had to give him five bushels of rice, hence his nickname of "rice-grabber" Mi-tseh 米賊. The descendants of Chang Tao-ling 張道陵 follow the same profession, and bear the title of "Heavenly Master", T'ien-shi 天師 (3), as may be read in the "General Annals Revised", Kang-muh tsih-lan 綱目集覽 (4). A full account of the trade and its emoluments is given in the IInd Book of the life of Chang Tao-ling 張道陵.

At the present day, charms bestowed by the "Heavenly Master", T'ien-shi 天師, may be obtained at all Taoist monasteries. These

(1) Shun-ti reigned A. D. 126-145. His Court was at Loh-yang 洛陽, in Honan, having been removed thither since A. D. 25, hence this part of the dynasty is known as the "Eastern Han".

(2) A. D. 34-156. Said to be born at T'ien-muh-shan 天目山, in Chekiang. At the age of seven, he mastered all the writings of Lao-tze. Refusing Imperial offers to go to the Court, he retired to the mountains of Szechw'an, and subsequently to those of Kiangsi, where he devoted himself to the study of mysticism and alchemy, and received from Lao-tze knowledge of charms and spells. He finally succeeded in discovering the elixir of life, and having swallowed a pill, ascended as an Immortal to the skies, being then aged 123 years. He is the head of the Taoist Church and his name is inscribed on all charms. Mayers. Chinese Reader's Manual. p. 10.

(3) The succession is perpetuated by the transmigration of the soul of Chang Tao-ling into the body of some youthful member of the family, whose heirship is supernaturally revealed as soon as the miracle is effected. Mayers. Ibid.

(4) See "General Annals Revised", Kang-muh tsih-lan 綱目集覽. 江西龍虎山. 張天師之始祖張道陵. 東漢順帝時. 造作符書. 治病惑民. 受其道者. 出米五斗. 時稱米賊. 道陵子孫. 繼傳其法. 自號師君.

magic writings are suspended in the principal apartment of the house, and are reputed efficacious for warding off every evil influence. The petitioners kneel down respectfully and burn incense before them.

Buddhist monks deal also in magic charms. These are written on white, yellow, or red paper, and bear in vermilion ink the picture of the God Wei-t'o, 韋陀菩薩 (1). According to the work called Fan-i-ming-i 翻譯名義, Wei-t'o 韋陀 is a charm, and is advertised as such.

They pretend it has the power to ward off all evil influence. The seal employed in stamping it is made of peach-wood, and is multi-coloured. Images of Kiang T'ai-kung 姜太公 (2), or of the God of Riches, Tsai-shen 財神, are printed on these charms. They are paid for in rice or money, hence called "the golden revenue derived from charms". In reference to this practice, the work known as Wu Man-yun kiang-hsiang tsieh-wuh-shi 吳曼雲江鄉節物詩, describes them in the following terms: "their cinnabar scrawling resembles the footprints of wandering ducks (that is, the quaint meanderings of their charms are like the footprints left on the dust after the passage of a flock of ducks); we have likewise their magic scrolls squirming like worms or snakes; whether people understand them or not, they require five bushels of rice, and thanks to these cunning devices, they can eat many a hearty meal" (1).

(1) Transcription of Veda, a tutelary God borrowed from India and Tibet. He is General, under the Four Great Kings or Devas, who watch over every Buddhist temple. His image is found in the Entrance Hall, behind Maitreya, the future Buddha. He is the God Protector of Buddhism, and is represented as a warlike, fierce figure, with sword in hand, which sometimes rests crosswise above the arms folded in prayer. Tutelary Gods are peculiarly clever at overcoming the noxious influence of demons. Hackmann. Buddhism as a Religion. p. 213 & 215.

(2) Chief Councillor to Wen Wang and his son in the 11th and 12th century B. C. (beginning of the Chow dynasty). He is said to have exercised authority over the spirits of the unseen world. Even Sze-ma Ts'ien speaks of him as having "marshalled the spirits". Hence the phrase, "Kiang T'ai-kung tsai-tz'e" 姜太公在此, Kiang T'ai-kung is here, often seen written upon doors to frighten away evil spirits. Giles. Biographical Dictionary. p. 135.

These documents show that the origin of charms may be traced back to the times of Chang Tao-ling 張道陵 (2), who used them as a means for extorting rice. The Taoist priesthood has ever followed in his footsteps, and trade in them to-day to earn a livelihood.

Buddhist monks, ever eager for gain, seeing that the business brought in money, imitated the Taoists. Preparing their ink-slabs and cinnabar pencils, they began to draw up their own charms, as fancy and caprice prompted them; intricate tracings or characters (letters) more or less ingeniously entwined, with the purpose of exhibiting the supposed efficacy of their wares. They then hawked them through towns and hamlets, distributing them to every one they met, proclaiming aloud their efficacy for warding off all kinds of evil influence and misfortune. The Chinese people, credulous in the extreme, took these offers seriously, and without further consideration accepted their scripts and suspended them in their homes.

Buddhist and Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, set forth as an argument in favour of their charms, the example which local officials follow, when they issue a proclamation, forbidding something or expounding a point of law. The people, seeing that it bears the official seal, do not dare resist it, as they know it comes from a lawful representative of the government. The same thing takes place with reference to charms. They are given out as emanating officially from such or such a divinity; malignant demons and evil genii tremble at the very sight of these divine mandates (3). Moreover,

(3) Charms are orders, mandates, injunctions, issued under seal, and painted or written with a cinnabar pencil. They are the principal means of commanding spirits, expelling and killing "Kwei" 鬼. They help to catch, fetter, imprison, torture, drown, behead, kill, burn and roast, all kinds of spectres and ghosts. They call down Gods to receive sacrifices, and bestow felicity. De Groot. they become powerless over families, who have recourse to the protection of these charms, for the root of the peach-tree, wherewith these seals are made, has the undisputed efficacy of putting all demons to flight.

Without going into further details, we give herewith a specimen of one of these scripts. The charm represented in the annexed illustration is of unrivalled anti-demoniacal power, and an infallible specific for warding off all evil. Beneath its all-powerful efficacy, the whole family is protected from every possible misfortune. The charm is hung up over the entrance to the principal apartment of the house, or may also be placed inside the door-way.

These protective charms are suspended in houses, placed over door-ways, attached to trees (1), and are even sometimes worn on the person, as amulets.

Foreigners may have probably noticed, without understanding their purpose, the huge tridents drawn with lime-water on city walls, or found on each side of the city gates, or even beside the doors and windows of private houses. These white tridents are charms endowed with magic power, and efficacious for driving away all malignant demons, who might venture into the city, or come near peoples' homes. Such charms can even override Nature's laws, as when during prolonged drought, or a cruel epidemic, officials have them traced on walls, thus frustrating all evil influences, and restoring tranquillity and happiness among the people they govern.

Charms may be divided into various kinds, according to the purpose for which they are employed. Drawings are always in harmony with the colour of the paper, upon which they are written.

(1) In Chinese philosophy, trees and shrubs possess souls as much as men and animals. Shen 神 trees cure men of mental and bodily infirmities (fortifying their vital force); Kwei 鬼 trees inflict evil. Demons house in some trees and emerge frequently; they are subdued by charms. To this day, the belief in tree-spirits dangerous to man is strong in China. De Groot. The Religious System of China. Vol. V. p. 663.

EXORCISING CHARMS.

These are reputed all-powerful against ghosts and demons, whom they put to flight. Annexed are two specimens thereof.

Exorcising charm.

Buddhist and Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, burn these charms and the petition written on them, during the ceremony known as Ta-tsiwo 打醮, thanking the Gods for the deliverance of souls in Hades (1), and also during the ceremony called "Begging for Peace", P'ing-ngan-hsiang 平安香 (2). It is deemed an all-powerful specific for expelling from houses all maleficent demons, who molest and injure mortals. The name of the person for whose benefit the ceremony has been performed, as well as the date at which it has taken place, are written on the space left blank for that purpose.

(1) See this ceremony described above. Vol. I. p. 151.

(2) Taoist priests perform this ceremony for the purpose of begging peace and felicity upon a certain locality or family. It sometimes takes place during a pilgrimage to a famous shrine, as for instance to Kin-hwa-shan 九華山, in the Province of Nganhwei, where Ti-ts'ang Wang, the Ruler of Hades, is venerated.

The annexed charm is employed by Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士. It is deemed to be an order emanating from Lao-tze 老子, their venerable founder, and commanding all maleficent demons to depart without delay. It bears the date of the reigning emperor or ruler at the time it is burnt.

ARTICLE III.

CHARMS PROTECTING FROM FIRE.

These charms are employed by Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, who use them for the purpose of informing “Yen-ti” 炎帝, the God of Fire (1), that such a family has suffered from a conflagration. The person whose house has been burnt must not enter the house of others during the three days subsequent to the fire. It is only when the Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, have completed the expiatory ceremony, on the scene of the disaster, that the poor sufferers may resume their usual relations with their neighbours. The priests suspend the five following charms, bearing five different colours, towards the five directions of the compass. Green towards the East, red towards the South, yellow towards the West, blue towards the North, and violet in the Centre. Each sheet bears one of the names of the Five Elements: metal, wood, water, fire and earth, Kin, muh, shui, hwo, t'u 金木水火土.

When Buddhist priests are summoned to pray on the scene of the disaster, they frequently write on the charred buildings the character “water”, Shui 水, enclosing it within a circle. As the walls are generally blackened by the smoke and flames, they employ lime-water to trace these circles, and write out the characters.

(1) Also styled the “Fiery Ruler of the Southern Regions”. He is much revered and feared. In South China, an annual ceremony is performed in the fourth month to propitiate him and beg his aid in preventing fires. When a building escapes in a conflagration, he is thanked either in his temple or near the place destroyed. Taoist priests officiate. Food, wine and tea, are offered to him. The candles, however, may not be red, as this is inauspicious, but white, yellow or green. Doolittle. Social Life of the Chinese. Vol. I. p. 260.

The character "Shui" (water) traced with lime-water on charred buildings.

ARTICLE IV.

THERAPEUTIC CHARMS.

This kind of charm is in much more demand than others, and brings also more profit to the monks. For this reason, they have multiplied beyond all bounds these magic scripts, which prevent or cure diseases. Every kind of illness has almost its own peculiar specific.

The annexed illustration is a paper-puppet charm, T'i-jen 替人, representing sick persons. Buddhist priests, by their magic spells and prayers, pretend to have the power of transferring the disease of a child into the paper manikin; or into the picture, male or female, printed on the paper charm. The charm is afterwards burnt, and the trick is played, the disease having thus vanished. Hence this charm is called a substitute-charm, that is to say, a paper-puppet or manikin is substituted for a living person, the disease of the latter having being transferred to the former, and the charm burnt forthwith. Frequently this paper-puppet is taken outdoors and borne to some remote place, generally a cross-road, where it is burnt. This process bears some resemblance to the ceremony of the scape-goat (1), as practised formerly among the Jews.

(1) According to the Jewish ritual, a goat (Azazel) was brought to the door of the tabernacle, where the high-priest laid his hands upon him, confessing the sins of the people, and putting them on the head of the goat. The symbolical bearer was then sent into the wilderness, carrying away the iniquities of the people, that they may never more appear (Leviticus XVI. 21).

Soul-restoring charm.

When some dire disease endangers the life of a dear child, parents procure the annexed charm, and place it beneath the pillow, in order to bring back the soul in all haste upon the caparisoned courser. A gourd-shell, hermetically closed, is attached to the horse's saddle. This is supposed to contain the soul, and bring it back to its rightful owner.

The 12 wonderful therapeutic charms.

The 12 following therapeutic charms form a series, of which each sheet corresponds to one of the twelve cyclic animals, that preside over the Chinese time-division of twelve years. Upon each of them Buddhist priests write the name of the patient, and the name of the animal, presiding over the year in which he was born. Provided with this script, they come to the house of a sick person, and during the ceremony burn one of these charms.

Thus, if the patient is born in the year of the “Rat”, Shu 鼠, the Buddhist priest takes a “Tze” 子 charm, writes the name of the “Rat” in the blank space, and adds the date of the month and day. The charm is then burnt, and the patient must be infallibly cured.

Charm preserving from an epidemic.

Annexed is the fac-simile of a charm, which has been suspended over the door-way of a pagan household, at Hwo Chow 和州, province of Nganhwei 安徽, in the year 1907. Its purpose was to preserve the inhabitants from a terrible epidemic which then ravaged the country (1).

(1) Demons and spectres perform in the Universe the leading part in the distribution of evil, and hence visit mankind with disease. The medical art also acknowledges them as authors of illness. The disastrous influence of demons is never so much felt and feared as in times of epidemics. A roaring trade is then driven in charms, amulets, and demon-expelling medicines. De Groot. The Religious System of China. Vol. V. p. 705 (Demonism in Pathology).

All these therapeutic charms are fac-similes of drawings obtained from "superstitious paper shops", Chi-ma-tien 紙馬店. Copies suspended over the door-ways of pagan households, or placed in their homes, have been kindly supplied to the Author, during the twenty years that he pursued his researches into "Chinese superstitions". Several are communicated only to relatives or intimate friends, as for instance the one for hastening the delivery of a woman in labour.

Charm for relieving inflammation of the lungs and chest.

This charm is employed in cases of inflammatory diseases caused by the prolonged heat of the season. Thus for instance in inflammation of the lungs and chest etc... The written charm is burnt, and the ashes steeped in an infusion of plantain are administered to the sufferer.

Charm for stopping persistent perspiration which weakens the sufferer.

This charm is administered in the following manner. Some grains of corn, already half-eaten by weevils, are boiled in water. The yellow-paper charm is then burnt, and the ashes mingled with the above decoction are administered to the patient. This remedy is of marvellous efficacy!

Charm curing from fever.

This charm is employed in cases of persistent and acute fever, or when typhoid sets in accompanied with inflammation. The charm is burnt, and the ashes mingled with a decoction of ten grains of ginger are given to the patient.

Another charm for allaying fever-heat.

The following is a wonderful specific for lowering the temperature of those who have high fever. Recourse is had to most potent means. The Gods of the Nine Great Rivers of the Universe (1) are invoked, as also the divinities that preside over the canals of the country, and all are begged to cool the atmosphere as quickly as possible. It is obvious that such a vast amount of fresh water must produce a salutary reaction on the patient, tortured by the burning heat of the fever.

(1) The Universe is China, the Ancients knowing no other country. The Nine Great Rivers are those whose course was regulated by Yü 禹 (B. C. 2205-2197). Among them are the Yangtze, the Han, Wei, Tsi, Hwai and Loh rivers. See Legge's Classics. Vol. III. p. 141 (The Tribute of Yü).

Charm curing from diarrhœa.

Charm curing from diarrhœa.

The annexed charm is of unrivalled efficacy in all cases of diarrhœa.

Pagan folks, suffering from dysentery, have frequently recourse to this means.

It is administered to the sufferer in the same manner as other charms previously described.

Charm for hastening delivery.

This charm is renowned for hastening delivery when childbirth is difficult.

It is exclusively employed by Buddhist priests, who invoke for the purpose Jū-lai (1) Buddha, 如來佛, and beg the Dragon to come to the aid of the woman and help to bring forth a male child from her womb.

Pagans believe in its marvellous efficacy. One of them said to the Author: "it is but required to apply the charm on the woman's body, the child will be infallibly brought forth, even should the mother's womb be rent asunder". The conviction with which he uttered these words seemed to be perfectly sincere.

Charm protecting from malevolent ghosts.

Pagans wear the annexed charm on their persons, or sewn on to their clothes, in order to secure protection from the malevolent attacks of ghosts, who may happen to leave their tombs (1).

The Author was an eye-witness to one of these comical occurrences. About two years ago, near the large village of "Tsing-tsi", in the district of Han-shan-hsien 含山縣, Nganhwei province, a woman pretended that she saw a ghost leave its tomb, bearing, she added, a bunch of flowers in its hands. The news of the apparition spread abroad like wildfire, and thousands of persons flocked to the spot and examined the phenomenon. A small hole was discovered in the coffin. Since over ten years the decaying wood had been falling to pieces, and this was the simple cause of the hole. Buddhist and Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, were immediately summoned, and endless charms were written out in order to secure protection from the malevolent ghost.

(1) It has been stated in Vol. I. p. 136, how Chinese believe that the Kwei 鬼, or inferior soul, remains with the body in the grave till corruption sets in. After death, the Shen 神 or Huan 魂, that is the superior soul may also return, re-occupy the corpse and revive it, and this may take place after months and years. Such a belief explains sufficiently to the popular mind how ghosts may leave their tombs and molest the living. De Groot, The Religious System of China. Vol. IV. p. 123.

Another soul-restoring charm (1).

The annexed charm purports to restore the soul, which has just left the body.

When a child is near dying, and its soul is believed to have just left the body, the excarnated spirit is immediately pursued, and when seized, is compelled to re-enter the body it has just abandoned. To accomplish this purpose, the charm is burnt, and the ashes mingled with some beverage are administered to the child.

Taoist nostrum curing all diseases.

The annexed is a Taoist nostrum, curing likewise all kinds of disease.

At the top are the names of the “Three Taoist Heavens” (1), abode of the Three Divinities, which constitute the Taoist Trinity (2).

(1) The Three Taoist heavens are Yuh-ts'ing 玉清 (the Pearly Azure), Shang-ts'ing 上清 (the Upper Azure), and T'ai-ts'ing 太清 (the Supreme Azure). These vaults or abodes are three parts, into which Taoists divide the primordial Cosmic space (see IInd Part. Ch. I. Art. 2).

(2) The Taoist Trinity, or “Three Pure Ones”, San-ts'ing 三清, are Yuh-hwang 玉皇, the Pearly Emperor and chief God of the Taoist Pantheon; Tao-kün 道君, and Lao-tze 老子 (Ibid).

Charm preserving from the effects of sunstroke.

The annexed charm is a specific preserving from a disease known among the Chinese as "Pi-lung-sha" (1). It resembles sunstroke, and produces at times the most sudden effects.

This marvellous specific has been given to the Author by a pagan from Hwo Chow 和州, in Nganhwei province. The season of the great heat being over, and having no further fear of the dire disease, he took down the charm, which a Buddhist priest had placed over the door-way.

(1) Sha 痧 is the term by which the Chinese generally design cholera or gripe.

Charm for curing diseases among cattle.

Buddhist or Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, delineate an ox, more or less approximately, on a sheet of yellow paper. They then recite their classics, mutter incantations, and transmit the disease of the real ox into the paper substitute. The surrogate is then burnt, and the disease disappears.

In shops where superstitious objects are sold, images already printed may be purchased, and this facilitates the work of the officiating Buddhist priests.

Charm for curing porcine diseases.

The same process, as for the ox, is employed in curing diseases among swine, that is to say, the disease of the living animal is transmitted to the paper substitute. This is then burnt, and the disease disappears.

Herewith is a picture of a substitute hog, and that of the God of Swine (1). At his feet is one of the animals he is deemed to protect. This latter charm is the more renowned, and is burnt in honour of the God of the swine-herd.

(1) Doolittle, who mentions this God in South China, says that according to some he was a successful pork-butcher. One day he refused a piece of meat on trust to a poor student, who, afterwards on becoming a high official, took vengeance on him. According to others, he was a swine-raiser, who, seeing his flock carried off by disease, died of grief. As he is very deaf, worshippers, when praying to him, rub his ears and pat him on the back, to awaken interest in their petition. If they are heard, a thank offering is made in the usual way. Doolittle. Social Life of the Chinese. Vol. I. p. 270.

ARTICLE V.

Charms bringing felicity.

Five, specially delivering from Hades.

Countless are the drawings, more or less phantastic, the meandering and squirming scrolls, invented by all those, who, be they Buddhists or Taoists, Tao-shi 道士, live at the expense of simple-minded folks. China easily holds the record for the number and absurdity of these magic nostrums.

Herewith are five felicitous charms. They are exclusively employed by Taoists, Tao-shi 道士, while performing the ceremony known as: Ta-tsiao 打醮, thanking the Gods for the deliverance of souls from Hades (1). These paper charms are hung up towards the five directions (2), as the Chinese headings prescribe. Each sheet contains a prayer to the Taoist Gods (3). During the ceremony, they are all burnt, in order to convey thus the petition to the proper divinity.

(1) See this ceremony described and illustrated. Vol. I. p. 151.

(2) See Note on the Five Chinese points or directions. Supra. p. 174.

(3) Principally to the Pearly Emperor, Supreme Ruler. He is deemed to be the Lord of the physical world and the Saviour of men. In the Taoist Pantheon, he corresponds to the Confucian Shang-ti 上帝, though he is much more humanised; and to the Buddhist Fuh 佛, or Sakyamuni. Edkins. Religion in China. p. 112.

Charm for obtaining a bountiful harvest.

Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, perform an annual ceremony, known as “Ts'ing-miao-hwui”, or “festival of sprouting seeds”. This takes place when the first blades of corn appear. The officiating priests proceed to the fields, and suspend from reeds five written charms, of five different colours. These are placed at the four cardinal points, and one in the centre. After chanting their classics, the sheets are burnt, for the purpose of obtaining a bountiful harvest that year.

Annexed is a specimen of one of these charms. It is divided into four parts, and bears pictures of the dragon, the horse, the phoenix and the stork (1).

(1) The dragon, Lung 龍, is China's God of water and rain. The phoenix is a bird of good omen and felicity. The stork is the aerial courser of the Immortals. In the picture, the character Yun 雲 cloud, is prefixed to each animal, in the hope that they will specially influence the watery element.

Buddhist charm for ending drought.

The annexed is a Buddhist prayer-charm.

When the country has suffered from prolonged drought, Buddhist priests offer prayer, and perform the ceremony known as “Tso-fu-sze”. This is similar to that called K’iu-yü 求雨, begging for rain. Then the Dragon stirs up the seas, and a beneficent rain falls on the parched earth.

All this is graphically expressed in the annexed picture.

The four characters: Fung-tiao-yü-shun 風調雨順, written in the four corners, mean “genial distribution of wind and rain”.

Charm of universal efficacy.

The annexed charm is called “Wan-ling-fu” 萬靈符 (1), or charm of universal efficacy.

It is employed by Taoist priests, Tao shi 道士, while performing the ceremony called “Ta-tsiao” 打醮 (2), that is delivering souls from Hades; and also during that known as “burning incense for peace”, Shao-p'ing-ngan-hsiang 燒平安香 (3).

(1) Wan-ling 萬靈, means literally “ten thousand virtues”.

(2) See this ceremony described Vol. I. p. 151.

(3) This ceremony will be fully described in Vol. V. ch. VIII. art. 27.

Charm calling down heavenly consolation.

The annexed charm is known as that bestowing “sweet dew from above”, Kan-lu-fu 甘露符 (1).

It is deemed to draw down from the blissful abode of the Gods, the sweet dew of consolation, upon all afflicted hearts.

(1) Kan-lu 甘露, is regarded as the ambrosia of the Gods, and priests sprinkle it for ghosts to sip. Williams, Chinese Dictionary 露.

Charm assuring protection to a new building.

The annexed charm was given to the Author at Yun-tsao, as the text indicates, and is called: T'u-sze-hsih 土司檄.

Before building a house, it is customary in China, to invite a geomancer, in order that according to the rules of his profession, he may choose a favourable site. On such an occasion as the above, so important in the life of a pagan, Buddhist and Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, lent their help, and drew up this written charm, for the purpose of discovering the most felicitous site, assuring protection to the family from all diseases.

The Author had been able to copy this interesting document before the day officially assigned for burning the original. He subsequently succeeded in obtaining the model which served to draw up the copy used on the above occasion.

Charm expressing a desire for gold.

The annexed lozenge-shaped charm expresses a fervid wish for the possession of the yellow metal. Such, indeed, is the sense of the four characters so gracefully entwined:

Hwang kin wan liang

黃 金 萬 兩

(of) yellow gold ten thousand ounces.

萬貫

(May I enjoy) ten thousand ounces of gold.

Chao-ts'ai tsin-pao 招財進寶 (1).

Make profit and secure wealth.

The four characters written distinctly above, are gracefully entwined to form the cipher, which is seen in this second lozenge-shaped figure. By proceeding from right to left, and paying close attention, they can still be distinctly perceived in the cipher.

This charm is also a wish for riches, a luck-bearing script, which is hung up in almost every pagan house.

(1) Chao-ts'ai t'ung-tze 招財童子 is the lad who causes profit, that is the "God of Wealth", worshipped in all Chinese shop doors. Williams. Chinese Dictionary 招.

Cipher representing the three blessings.

Happiness, emolument and longevity: Fuh-luh-show 福祿壽 (1).

At the upper part of the annexed cipher, formed by the entwining of the three characters, may be seen emerging the bald head of old Show-sing (2), the God of Longevity. Instead of the customary staff of an old man, he grasps in his hand the extension of the upper stroke of the character "Show" 壽.

Some Chinese literati are very skilled in thus entwining characters, and forming auspicious emblems or luck-bearing ciphers.

(1) Fuh 福. Happiness, the felicity resulting from the protection of the Gods, good fortune, blessings. The Chinese enumerate 5 blessings: longevity, riches, health, love of virtue and a peaceful end.

Luh 祿. Official emolument, happiness conferred by the Emperor or ruler, state or superiors. Any award. Enjoyment of salary and income.

Show 壽. Age, longevity. Much used in congratulating persons on birthdays. Williams. Chinese Dictionary.

(2) Each of the 3 blessings indicated above depend on a star, or rather on a Star-god. The Star-god of longevity is Canopus, in the Constellation Argo. It was looked upon anciently as next to Sirius in brilliancy. It may be seen slightly above the Southern horizon (latitude of Shanghai) 9 to 10 p. m. in February and March.

Prayer-charm for obtaining protection

Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, have invented this prayer, with a view to obtaining protection for sailors and sea-faring men.

Lung Wang 龍王, the Dragon-king (1), is begged to grant a happy voyage and safe navigation to trading-vessels, thus also enabling ship-owners to get rich quickly.

Charm conferring peace and felicity.

Charm conferring peace and felicity.

The annexed is a peace-conferring charm, and is commonly styled P'ing-ngan-fu 平安符.

This luck-bearing script is suspended from the cross-beams of the house, especially on the fifth day of the fifth month (1), with the purpose of securing peace throughout the year.

On the top may be seen the seal of one of the local deities, whose statue is erected in some famous temple of the neighbourhood.

Buddhist and Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, engage in this business, and go from door to door, offering their wares, for which they are handsomely paid.

(1) The fifth day of the fifth month corresponds roughly to some date in our first week of June. In China it is the dragon-boat festival, celebrated in memory of a poet and patriot of the fourth century B. C., who, degraded by his prince, and disgusted with the world, drowned himself in the Siang river (Hunan). It is also an auspicious day throughout the country.

Artistic cipher, representing the character

Show 壽, Longevity.

The character Show 壽, Longevity, is sometimes very artistically delineated on a large scroll or panel, suspended in the guest-hall, and occupying the principal place of honour above the native divan. In such cases, it is worshipped, as if it were some kind of a God; incense is burnt before it, and bowings are made towards the ground: even prayers are addressed to it to obtain long life; in a word, it is the object of real superstitious worship.

When this character Show 壽, delineated in gilt paper, is sent as a congratulatory present to persons, who attain their sixtieth year, it expresses much more than a wish, and superstitious ideas and fancies are generally involved in the present.

Artistic cipher, representing the character "Show", Longevity.

*The “Pah-kwa”, or Eight Diagrams.
The “Yin and Yang” principles in the centre.*

The Pah-kwa 八卦, or Eight Diagrams.

The Pah-kwa 八卦 (1), or eight diagrams, attributed to Fuh-hsi 伏羲 (2), and Wen Wang 文王 (3), are also a powerful charm, much prized by the Chinese.

These mystic symbols are often seen above the entrance-door of houses. The geomancer has found that the door-way was unpropitiously situated, and to remedy the evil, the Pah-kwa are carved on a wooden shield, which is nailed on the lintel of the door. Good luck must follow in posthaste.

(1) These 8 diagrams are a combination of triple lines—whole and broken—developed by Fuh-hsi 伏羲. The original plan of the symbolism was revealed to him, on the back of a supernatural being, called a dragon-horse, that rose from the waters of the Yellow River. They served much for divination and geomancy, during the period preceding the era of Wen Wang (12th century B. C.). Transmitted orally, they were consigned in the Chow Yih 周易, or Book of Changes of the Chow dynasty, which, with the commentary of Confucius, forms the Yih King 易經, one of the most ancient of the Chinese classics. Mayers. Chinese Reader's Manual. p. 334.

(2) The legendary founder of the Chinese empire, B. C. 2852-2738. He succeeded to the divine beings, who are believed to have reigned countless ages before human society was constituted. His father was heaven, and his mother bore him 12 years. He established his capital in Honan province, near the present K'ai-fêng-fu 開封府. He is credited with having invented the art of writing, in the shape of rough pictorial symbols, from which the present system of pictographs has been developed. Mayers. Ibid. p. 45.

(3) Canonised title, posthumously conferred on the Duke of Chow (B. C. 1231-1135), by his son Chow Kung. He is recognized as the virtual founder of the Chow dynasty. Cast into prison by the tyrant Chow Sin 紂辛 (last ruler of the Yin dynasty), he occupied his leisure in composing an arrangement of the symbols of the Yih 易, or Book of Changes. Mayers. Ibid. p. 255.

Charm known as that of the “Five Poisons”, Wu-tuh 五毒.

The annexed charm is endowed with protective and exorcising efficacy. It is suspended from the cross-beams of the roof, on the fifth day of the fifth month.

This cipher is a combination of the exorcising and luck-bearing charm, generally known as that of the “Five Poisons”, or five poisonous reptiles, Wu-tuh 五毒 (1).

(1) These 5 poisonous animals here referred to are the viper, centipede, scorpion, toad and spider. Taken together, they have the power to counteract all pernicious influences. In South China, says Doolittle, images of them are procured, and worshipped by families, which have an only son. Pictures of them are made with black silk, on new red cloth pockets, worn by children for the first time, on the first five days of the fifth month. It is believed that such a charm will tend to keep the children from having the colic, and from pernicious influences generally. Doolittle, Social Life of the Chinese, Vol. II. p. 316.

Famous charm purchased at Kiu-hwa-shan 九華山.

The annexed charm was purchased at Kiu-hwa-shan 九華山 (1), the famous pilgrim-resort in honour of Ti-ts'ang-wang (2).

On the top may be seen the seal of the God, stamped on it by the Buddhist priests of the temple, a fact which imparts to it the highest value.

The priests drive a roaring trade in these magic charms, and thousands of pilgrims purchase them at the shrine.

(2) One of the five well-known Bodhisattvas (illuminating and merciful beings, representing the saving principle of Buddhism), who seeks to save mankind from the punishments of Hades, over which he presides as ruler. Edkins. Ibid. p. 242.

ARTICLE VI.

Stellar Charms.

According to Taoist teaching, every human being is a living incarnation of some stellar orb. Canny speculators in human folly discovered here a source of unparalleled profit.

Should a person fall ill, there is nothing better than to invoke the star incarnated within him. Hence countless stellar charms, affording protection, begging favours, healing etc... The Chinese work entitled "Ts'ü-kih-pi-hsiung ts'üen-shu" 趨吉避凶全書, contains a valuable collection of them.

This kind of charm belongs to the class generally known as Chü-ma 紙馬, that is paper charms, which are burnt.

The annexed illustrations will convey a general idea of such charms. They are luck-bearing scripts, reputed for conducting to a happy marriage.

How the Author secured all these marvellous charms.

- 1°. Pagan friends and acquaintances, knowing that he took interest in the subject, supplied him with a good number of them.
- 2°. Frequent visits to shops dealing in superstitious objects, "Chi-ma-tien" 紙馬店, helped him to discover some very rare ones. The greater part have been purchased in such shops at Yang chow-fu 揚州府, Kao-yiu-chow 高郵州, and Nanking 南京, in Kiangsu province; at Wuhu 蕪湖, Hwo Chow 和州, Hanshan-hsien 含山縣, Yun-tsao, and Wu-wei-chow 無爲州, in Nganhwei province.
- 3°. Several have been copied faithfully from models found in Buddhist or Taoist works.
- 4°. Some have been given to him by Buddhist and Taoist priests, Tao-shi 道士, when visiting their temples.
- 5°. A very complete work in 4 volumes, entitled: "Tseng-pu pi-chwen wan-fah kwei-tsung" 增補秘傳萬法歸宗, treats of charms, and contains a fine collection of them, relating to all kinds of subjects, even some rather risky ones, such as those exciting to unlawful love and intrigues.
- 6°. The work entitled "Ts'ü-kih-pi-hsiung ts'üen shu" 趨吉避凶全書, contains many fine specimens of stellar charms.

The purpose principally intended in this work has been to exhibit popular charms generally used by the people in the two provinces of Kiangsu and Nganhwei. The Author has been compelled to discard several curious specimens. A very big volume would have been required, in order to publish all those now collected by him in several large albums. He has therefore contented himself with selecting only important and interesting ones from each kind.

The full collection may be found in the Sicawei library (Chinese department), and at the T'usawei Printing Press.
